*Mr. Ingersoll thought it would hardly do, when people were asking Congress for bread, to give them a tone, and he imagined that the present preparation was no more or eas than that he believed four-fifths of the people, if there could be a popular vote had on the subject, would vote in favor of the increase of currency, that, too, in the shape of greenbacks, Mr. Townsend also opposed the report, because he looked upon it as a measure of great expansion.

Mr. Benton characterized it as the most arrant nonsonse talk. He is in tayor of inflation or expansion, and was twitted considerably by Messrs, Eldridge and Ingersulf as to his own views on greenbacks, but was amusogly successful in keeping these views

Mr. Jones advocated the conference report, and stated facts showing propriety of redistribution of the currency. He was afraid unless the conerence report was agreed to the bill would fail. He approved the report ceause it met his views to their full extent, and he believed it was the best the House could get.
